

INNERPLACE

In an age of impersonal technology, Innerplace Concierge offers its members London's most personal service

Whilst other concierge services are getting bumper investments to focus on artificial intelligence and some hotels are swapping out Golden Keys concierge members for Alexa, services like Innerplace are doubling down on the personal aspect of their product. There's something that's irreplaceable about having a human to interact with rather than a machine. Many of these new services are failing because they have no contacts within the industry, whereas Innerplace has fifteen years of tight relationships and connectivity to draw from to help members get what they need.

People want to hear about a restaurant or club from someone they trust who has visited it before, not an algorithm-driven computer programme. Innerplace has a clear track record of improving social lives since former investment banker Tim Badham founded the company in 2003. Fifteen years later, Innerplace has proven itself one of the most discreet, personal and honest concierge services in the capital, with a track record of providing Londoners with access to many of the city's most exclusive establishments and events.

In an industry known for flashes in the pan, Innerplace has established itself as a reliable and connected concierge, for those who want a more personalised service. Similarly, it's proven itself dynamic in a changing world, adapting to immense shifts in the way people go out. In a world where everything's moving at breakneck speed, you can count on Innerplace to get you where you need to be.

Only Innerplace Members are able to access the personal concierge for tailored, specific expertise and make those all-important, hard-to-get reservations, with priority booking and the best tables at London's finest restaurants (with complimentary welcoming champagne at many) and free entry at London's top nightclubs.

As well as being experts on the capital's entertainment, culinary and nightlife scenes, Innerplace membership benefits include free entry access to top private members' clubs, VIP invitations to exclusive events, insider updates on the latest new openings, sold out tickets, and the opportunity to mingle with like-minded and discerning individuals at select members' parties.

In the past, Innerplace has helped members gain access to floor tables with top celebrities at award shows in London and abroad; secured private boxes for Royal Premieres; arranged personal fashion shows over afternoon tea with top designers on Bond Street and Savile Row; helped with memberships at the capital's most exclusive private members' clubs; and arranged meet and greets at shows and concerts that had been sold out for months.

Innerplace – London's most personal luxury concierge service.
